Story of a Belated Automobile Party With a Moral-Jefferson Guards Not Acquainted With German Dialect-Mr. Chang Writes An Epic on Selma Hall.

Lawyer loves to quote poetry, but that is not altogether pertinent to this moral tale

Suffice it to say that as the machine proceeded on its speedy way, four occupants, all young and fillarious, hastened to cast

The Lawyer drew his breath in between his teeth; got a firmer grip on the reins with one hand, and with the other, (which was entirely unoccupied at that time), reached under the seat. The Lady laughed no longer. She just waited. When she saw a shining nickel-plated revolver brought to light and firmly transferred to the Lawyer's right hand, she said:

"Oh my!" or some such significant phruse and then sat still in the Stanhope. (There was no other place.)

The plug proceeded. They, too, reached the top of the hill, Glancing with sieuthlike celerity from right to left and again cross wise, the Lawyer drove on apace. (This was about as fast as the plug would Thick shadows darkened the dusty road, still dustier by the trail of the flying auto. The moon drifted behind some clouds. All was still except for the far-distant call of volver, drove straight on down the hill. When they reached the level once again, there stood the red machine. Two men were trying to sooth it with kind words. Two ladies, young, beautiful and interesting (you could tell that even by moonlight) cheered them on, from the rear seat. The men needed cheering. They looked downcast. They had to. They knelt in the dust and pawed over the rear hind wheel. They also said things aloud and behind their mustaches.

Can you guess, little children, what had happened? If not I will tell you. I do not like to leave anybody in suspense. The auto had punctured her tire. That was the alleged pistol shot.

Now comes the real, the genuine, unadulterated essence of this story. Did the Lawyer at this moment, stand up in his fine new Stanhope, behind his old and decept beast, and egged on by the Lady, boldly and octantly fling into their teeth all those taunts before mentioned and endured?

Did he, I say? Or did he choose the other, the more magnanimous, the really all young and hilarious, hastened to cast forth various taunting remarks as they passed the plug and the Stanhope, such as:

"Bi! Watch our smoke!"

"Where did you get that horse" Where did you get that an-a-mile?

"Good-by! See you to-morrow morning in town," and similar statements calculated to raise the ire of anybody, I don't care whether he is driving Dick Welles or a Transvaal ox cart.

The Lawyer, I say, stopped quoting poetry and muttered things. The Lady laughed.

Just ahead of the auto and the Stanhope loomed a hill. Not a hig hill, you understand, but one of those nice moderate elevations which enliven the landscape on the Natural Bridge road.

The red, meables are the cast of the standscape on the Natural Bridge road.

The red, meables are the cast with me from the Fair. "This afternoon I started across the bridge to the Philippines. Two young women, whom I recognized as being clucated abroad and have rather extensively traveled, were just and struck off across the grass. A guard came quickly toward them.

"You can't cross on the grass. A guard came quickly toward them."

"The girls stared at him biankly. Then the one with the rosiest checks spoke, in German, What she said doesn't matter, it was something about knowing where they wanted to go. But the guard didn't understand. They could have been just as saucy as they plursed. He only looked after them as they continued their nice little imperational progress, and then said softly to himself, and I heard it.

"Now who'd a thought they were Dutch."

George Clifford Vich and Mrs. Vieh are reached the summit. (This story begins to Louis. They go about the middle of the month to some big women's college in Pennsylvania, where Mr. Vieh has accepted the chair of music, and will make their permanent home in the college town, which is said to be a very nice and congenial one. Three or four days each week he will have leisure and opportunity to do concert and recital work, and has many plans ahead from Washington and Baltimore during the coming season. He played in the East with considerable success last winter, and while we all rejoiced at said success, I fear, alas, that this was the starting point for the Eastern migration. Why is it that nice people simply won't consent to stay where their friends most want them?

But considered from other than purely selfish standpoints, this Eastern move is to be very advantageous. As the copy books would say it is "a splendid professional opportunity," and so friends of the Viehs must regard it and rejoice accordingly. Mr. Vish has not severed his association with Lindenwood, but expects to return several times the coming season to St. Louis and St. Charles.

Mr. Chang is writing an epic poem on Selma Hall, the William K. Kavanaugh place down the river, as you may have heard before. It is to be a special edition de luxe. I believe, with only one copy, and that presented to Mrs. Kavanaugh. Aifred Longden, connected with the British art exhibit, will libustrate the posm, which ought to make the whole of it rather fine, don't you think?

Miss Maud Niedringhaus wrote some nice little notes to her friends on Friday telling them of her engagement to a Colowas still except for the far-distant call of a night bird and a few operatic selections from Senor Bull Frog in a mightboring pool. (Rather neat bit of description, eh?) Candor compels me to any right here that nothing happened. It is painful, but the truth is not always either thrilling or expected.

very young, bit of horseflesh had extinguished herself by running away that morning. Hence the ping.

Somewhere near the "Nine-Mile Housethe chug-chug of an auto sounded behind them. Presently a huge scarlet machine—they could see the red in the moonshine—whizzed by, raising a cloud of dust
